Warning Signs of a Heart Attack

Catch the signs early

Don't wait to get help if you experience any of these heart attack warning signs. Some heart attacks are sudden and intense. But most start slowly, with mild pain or discomfort. Pay attention to your body and call 911 if you experience:

- Chest discomfort. Most heart attacks involve discomfort in the center of the chest that lasts more than a few minutes – or it may go away and then return. It can feel like uncomfortable pressure, squeezing, fullness or pain.
- Discomfort in other areas of the upper body. Symptoms can include pain or discomfort in one or both arms, the back, neck, jaw or stomach.
- Shortness of breath. This can occur with or without chest discomfort.
- Other signs. Other possible signs include breaking out in a cold sweat, nausea or lightheadedness.

Enrollment is now open for the 2020-2021 Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP). The program assists low-income families and seniors with paying their heating bills. Applications are available online or at the Area Agency on Aging office.

For more information about LIHEAP, including how to qualify and sign up, visit the Department of Human Services' website <https://www.dhs.pa.gov/Services/Assistance/Pages/LIHEAP.aspx>

Married Four Times

The local news station was interviewing an 80-year-old lady because she had just gotten married for the fourth time.

The interviewer asked her questions about her life, about what it felt like to be marrying again at 80, and then about her new husband's occupation.. "He's a funeral director," she answered. "Interesting," the newsman thought... He then asked her if she wouldn't mind telling him a little about her first three husbands and what they did for a living.

She paused for a few moments, needing time to reflect on all those years. After a short time, a smile came to her face and she answered proudly, explaining that she had first married a banker when she was in her 20's, then a circus ringmaster when in her 40's, and a preacher when in her 60's, and now - in her 80's - a funeral director. The interviewer looked at her, quite astonished, and asked why she had married four men with such diverse careers.

(Wait for it...)

- She smiled and explained, "I married one for the money, two for the show, three to get ready, and four to go."

Intruder

An elderly woman had just returned to her home from an evening at church service when she was startled by an intruder. As she caught the man in the act of robbing her home of its valuables, she yelled, "STOP! ACTS 2:38!" (Repent and be baptized, in the name of the lord, so that your sins may be forgiven.)

The burglar stopped in his tracks. The woman calmly called the police and explained what she had done. As the officer cuffed the man to take him in, he asked the burglar, "Why did you just stand there? All the old lady did was yell scripture at you."

"SCRIPTURE?!" replied the burglar, "She said she had an AXE and TWO 38's!"

Dead Duck

A woman brought a very limp duck into a veterinary surgeon. As she laid her pet on the table, the vet pulled out his stethoscope and listened to the bird's chest.

After a moment or two, the vet shook his head and sadly said, "I'm sorry, your duck, Cuddles, has passed away." The distressed woman wailed, "Are you sure?" "Yes, I am sure. Your duck is dead," replied the vet.

"How can you be so sure?" she protested. "I mean you haven't done any testing on him or anything. He might just be in a coma or something."

The vet rolled his eyes, turned around and left the room. He returned a few minutes later with a black Labrador Retriever. As the duck's owner looked on in amazement, the dog stood on his hind legs, put his front paws on the examination table and sniffed the duck from top to bottom. He then looked up at the vet with sad eyes and shook his head.

The vet patted the dog on the head and took it out of the room. A few minutes later he returned with a cat. The cat jumped on the table and also delicately sniffed the bird from head to foot. The cat sat back on its haunches, shook its head, meowed softly and strolled out of the room.

The vet looked at the woman and said, "I'm sorry, but as I said, this is most definitely, 100% certifiably, a dead duck."

The vet turned to his computer terminal, hit a few keys and produced a bill, which he handed to the woman..

The duck's owner, still in shock, took the bill. "$150!" she cried, "$150 just to tell me my duck is dead!"

The vet shrugged, "I'm sorry. If you had just taken my word for it, the bill would have been $20, but with the Lab Report and the Cat Scan, it's now $150."

Staying Safe From Sepsis

Preventing Infections and Improving Survival

Your immune system is on patrol every day. It protects your body from bacteria, viruses, and other germs. But if something goes wrong, it can also cause big problems.

Sepsis happens when your body's response to an infection spirals out of control. Your body releases molecules into the blood called cytokines to fight the infection. But those molecules then trigger a chain reaction.

"Sepsis is basically a life-threatening infection that leads to organ dysfunction," says Dr. Richard Hotchkiss, who studies sepsis at Washington University in St. Louis.

The most dangerous stage of sepsis is called septic shock. It can cause multiple organs to fail, including the liver, lungs, and kidneys.

Septic shock begins when the body's response to an infection damages blood vessels. When blood vessels are damaged, your blood pressure can drop very low. Without normal blood flow, your body can't get enough oxygen.

Almost 1.7 million people in the U.S. develop sepsis every year. Even with modern treatments, it still kills nearly 270,000 of those. Many recover. But some have lifelong damage to the body and brain.

"We can get many people over that first infection that caused the sepsis," Hotchkiss explains. "But then they're at risk of dying from a second infection because of their weakened condition."

Bacterial infections cause most sepsis cases. But sepsis can also result from other infections, including viral infections, such as COVID-19 or the flu (influenza).

Anyone can get sepsis. But certain people are at higher risk, including infants, children, and older adults.

The early symptoms of sepsis are similar to those of many other conditions. These can include fever, chills, rapid breathing or heart rate, a skin rash, confusion, and disorientation.

It's important to know the symptoms. Sepsis is a medical emergency. If you or your loved one has an infection that's not getting better or is getting worse, get medical care immediately.

Researchers are now looking for better ways to diagnose sepsis. One strategy is to use artificial intelligence to predict a patient's risk of sepsis when they have an infection.

There are few medicines that help treat sepsis. Doctors try to stop the infection and support the functions of vital organs. This usually includes giving oxygen and fluids.

Hotchkiss and other researchers are exploring new treatments for the condition. His team has been testing ways to measure which immune cells are affected by sepsis.

The traditional understanding of sepsis, he says, is that the body responds too strongly to an infection. But his group has found that the body also makes too few of some important types of immune cells. This makes it hard for the body to effectively fight the infection that first triggered sepsis. It can also cause a lot of collateral damage and make you more vulnerable to other germs.

Hotchkiss's team is now testing ways to boost the immune cells that are vital for fighting infections using drugs. They've found they can increase these cells in patients with sepsis. Next, they will be testing whether this new approach can improve survival.

For now, preventing infections is the best way to avoid sepsis. See the Wise Choices box for tips on staying ahead of sepsis.

11 Facts About Black History Month To Further Your Understanding Of The Holiday

For many of us, Black History Month is something we've grown up with hearing about. Maybe, if we were lucky, we went to a school that even taught facts about Black History Month and Black history as a whole each February. Often, though, it's easy to forget that Black History Month was only first nationally-recognized in 1969. That's barely more than 50 years ago. For some older adults, it might be surprising to realize that Black History Month only began some years after they were born. Before learning anything about Black History, though, it's important to recognize why the holiday exists. And to recognize that, it's important to also acknowledge that Black Americans have been consistently and systematically disenfranchised since the inception of the country itself. After that, it's easy to understand why having a dedicated month to acknowledging and celebrating the accomplishments of Black Americans is so incredibly important.

It was started by a historian and author.

According to the Library of Congress, National African American History Month first began in 1915 when Dr. Carter G. Woodson founded the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, which is now known as the Association for the Study of African American Life and History, or ASALH.

As the ASALH site says, Woodson was urging other organizations (including his college fraternity) to promote the achievements of Black Americans as early as 1920. He continued these efforts through the 1920s and in 1926, he put out a press release naming a week in February as Negro History Week.

The founder of the month was the son of former slaves.

As ASALH also explains, Woodson was the son of former slaves and completed his undergraduate, bachelor, and master's degree in just a few years. He attended Berea College and the University of Chicago. In addition to this, he also earned a PhD from Harvard in 1912. At the time, he was only the second African American to do so.

There is a special tribute to Woodson every year at the White House.

In honor of all Woodson achieved in his career, including the origins and eventual popularity of Black History Month, there is an ornament of Woodson that hangs on the White House's Christmas tree each year, according to the ASALH.

Woodson never lost hope that Black history would become a bigger part of American schools' curriculum. According to the ASALH site, Woodson died in 1950 but continued to believe that the Negro History Week he had created would cease to exist. Instead, he had hoped that the curriculum celebrating and teaching about the accomplishments of Black Americans would eventually become a seamless part of the curriculum. As an article entitled "The Origins Of Black History Month" on the ASALH site says of Woodson, "He pressed for schools to use Negro History Week to demonstrate what students learned all year. In the same vein, he established a Black studies extension program to reach adults throughout the year"

It wasn't until the 1976 that Black History Month was nationally-recognized.

Decades later, and after many individual towns had decided to recognize Black History Month, President Gerald Ford made Black History Month a national observance, as an article by TIME points out.

The month of February was chosen for two specific reasons.

According to History.com, February was chosen as the specific month for Black History Month because it's the month of both Frederick Douglass and Abraham Lincoln's birthdays.

Each year's Black History Month has a different theme and focus.

You might be surprised to learn that each Black History Month has a different area of focus. According to the ASALH site, themes for the last decade have included The Emancipation Proclamation/March On Washington (2013), Civil Rights in America (2014), Sites Of African American Memories (2016), The Crisis In Black Education (2017), African Americans in Times Of War (2018), and Black Migrations (2019). For 2020, the theme of the month was "African Americans and the Vote."

This is only the 100th year that all Black Americans had the same voting rights as white Americans.

According to People.com, 2020 is the 100th-year anniversary of the Nineteenth Amendment and the 15th Amendment, which gave women the right to Vote and African Americans the right to vote, respectively.

This speaks to Black History Month's 2020 theme, the point of which is to explore the ways in which Black Americans' rights to vote were denied and the ways in which they still are by voter suppression, an inherently racist tactic to prevent Black and brown people from voting.

The 2021 theme for Black History Month is "The Black Family: Representation, Identity, and Diversity."

According to the ASALH site, the 2021 theme for Black History Month is all about the Black Family and how it has been "stereotyped and vilified from the days of slavery to our own time."

The month will also focus on the ways in which Black families were separated from their birthplaces through the atrocities of slavery, and the effects this has had.

"The Black family knows no single location, since family reunions and genetic-ancestry searches testify to the spread of family members across states, nations, and continents," the ASALH reads.

The United States isn't the only country that celebrates February as Black History Month.

Even though Woodson began Negro History Week way back in 1926, since then other countries have joined the United States in recognizing February as Black History Month. According to National Geographic, that includes countries like Canada, Germany, and the United Kingdom.

The month is recognized each year by Democrat and Republican presidents alike.

According to ASAH, "every American president, Democrat and Republican, has issued proclamations endorsing the Association's annual theme" for Black History Month since the 1970s.
